TRUMP WANTS SANCTIONS AGAINST NORTH KOREA

1 President Donald Trump said the U.N. Security Council must be prepared to impose new sanctions on North Korea as concerns mount that it may test a sixth nuclear bomb as early as Tuesday. "The status quo in North Korea is also unacceptable," Trump told a meeting with the 15 U.N. Security Council ambassadors, including China and Russia, at the White House on Monday. "The council must be prepared to impose additional and stronger sanctions on North Korean nuclear and ballistic missile programs. ... This is a real threat to the world, whether we want to talk about it or not. North Korea is a big world problem and it's a problem that we have to finally solve," he said. "People put blindfolds on for decades and now it's time to solve the problem." REUTERS

LAWYER WILL REPRESENT ANOTHER PASSENGER

2 The lawyer representing Dr. David Dao, who was dragged from a United Airlines plane, said he will also represent a woman whose clash with an American Airlines flight attendant went viral over the weekend. Thomas Demetrio told CNBC that he will represent both passengers whose recent confrontations with airline and airport employees sparked global outrage and prompted a nationwide conversation over U.S. carriers' treatment of passengers. "Her tale is compelling. The video is a microcosm of what's wrong with the airline industry today," Demetrio said in an interview with CNBC. In a video posted on Facebook by a bystander aboard the American Airlines flight, the woman is seen in tears and holding a young child after a male flight attendant had apparently wrested a stroller from her. HOLLANDE URGES FRENCH TO REJECT LE PEN

3 France's outgoing president, Francois Hollande, on Monday urged people to back centrist Emmanuel Macron in a vote to choose his successor next month and reject far-right leader Marine Le Pen, whose place in the run-off represented a "risk" for France. Macron and Le Pen, leader of the National Front (FN), go head-to-head on May 7 after taking the top two places in Sunday's first round. Opinion polls indicate that the business-friendly Macron, who has never held elected office, will take at least 61 percent of the vote against Le Pen after two defeated rivals pledged to back him to thwart her eurosceptic, anti-immigrant platform. REUTERS

OBAMA BACK IN THE SPOTLIGHT, VOWS TO HELP FUTURE LEADERS

4 Former President Barack Obama on Monday made his first major appearance since leaving office, having chosen Chicago, the city where his political career started, to emerge from a three-month hiatus from the public eye. In a panel discussion at the University of Chicago, where Obama once taught constitutional law, the 44th president told the audience that he had been spending a lot of time thinking about what's next for him. "The single most important thing I can do is to help in any way I can prepare the next generation to take up the baton and to take their own crack at changing the world," he said. GETTY IMAGES

NEW ORLEANS REMOVES OFFENSIVE STATUE

5 New Orleans removed a statue that the mayor said glorified a 19th-century attack on police by white supremacists, the first of four monuments that the city will relocate to send a message of "diversity, inclusion and tolerance." Authorities took down the statue honoring the so-called Battle of Liberty Place, acting without notice and under the cover of darkness for security reasons, and will move it to a museum or other facility, Mayor Mitch Landrieu said. A federal court cleared the way for its removal in March. Erected in 1891, the monument commemorates an 1874 attack on the racially integrated city police and state militia by the white supremacist "Crescent City White League," the mayor's office said. "The statue was put up to honor the killing of police officers by white supremacists," Landrieu said. REUTERS

Consumer advocates battle smartphone manufacturers for 'Right to Repair'

Massachusetts and a handful of other states have bills that would require smartphone manufacturers to make available any information or specific parts needed to repair a device.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

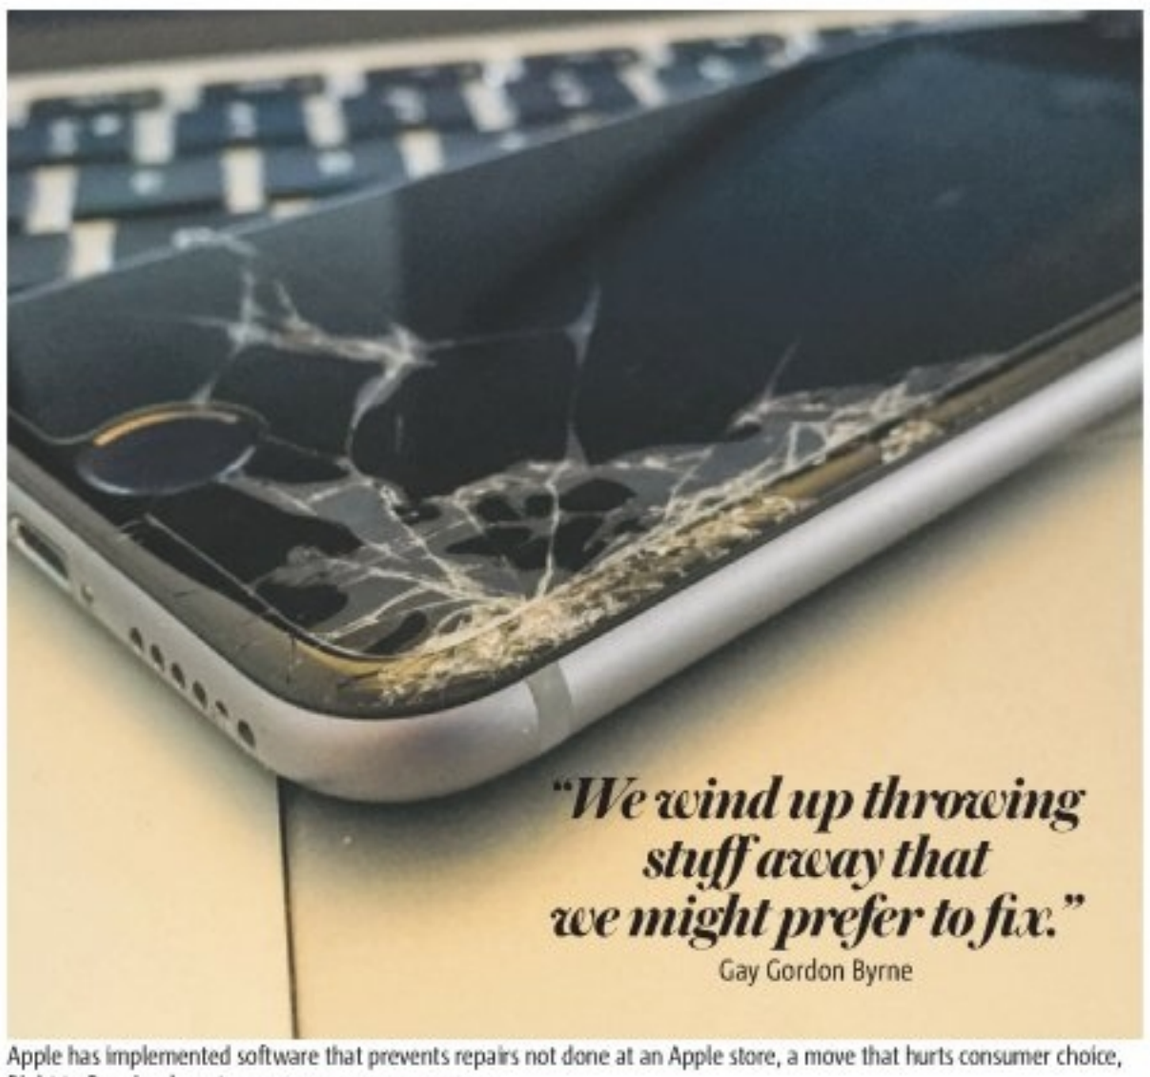
kristin.toussaint@metro.us



Apple has implemented software that prevents repairs not done at an Apple store, a move that hurts consumer choice, Right to Repair advocates say. FLICKR CREATIVE COMMONS

As it now stands, two options exist if your smartphone, tablet or other digital device breaks: pay hundreds of dollars for a new one or pay hundreds of dollars to get the existing one repaired by the manufacturer.

Among its features, Apple's iPhone 7 includes one that prevents a consumer from making their own repairs to the home button or other parts, which in previous iPhone generations, could be fixed at independent repair shops. Independent shops also have limited to no access to replacement parts for other products, including MacBooks. Other device makers also withhold information about how their products work so that users can only have them serviced from the company.

But that kind of effort runs counter to the consumer's best interests, say advocates of so-called "Right to Repair" laws that have been introduced in eight states, including Massachusetts. The legislation would require Apple, Samsung and others to make available any information or specific parts — like a chip that contains the company's software — needed to repair the device. That means instead of only being able to go to Apple, a consumer can bring their product to any qualified technician, who could use the instructions and obtain the parts needed to fix the problem.

Gay Gordon Byrne, executive director of the digital advocacy nonprofit Repair Association, said Apple's insistence that no one else be allowed to fix its devices creates a monopoly and makes "the repairs so expensive that the incentive is to buy a new one, always."

The Massachusetts bill, which has been referred to the committee on Consumer Protection and Professional Licensure, is scheduled to be heard in the fall. Similar legislation is being debated in New York, Nebraska, Minnesota, Kansas, Wyoming, Illinois and Tennessee.

Apple did not respond to a request for comment, but has pushed back on the Right to Repair bills. In February, Vice's Motherboard quoted a source that said "an Apple representative, staffer or lobbyist will testify against the bill" at a hearing in Nebraska, arguing that if consumers tried to repair their own phones, it could cause the lithium battery to catch fire.

These kinds of laws wouldn't just apply to smartphones. In Europe, the average life of a refrigerator plummeted from 14 years to five years, Byrne said. "It has nothing to do with the compressors. It has everything to do with the electronics." But, she added, if you "could fix your stuff, and you could fix it reasonably, you can keep it for longer."

"That's where it really stings the consumer," she said. "We wind up throwing stuff away that we might prefer to fix. We don't have the option anymore."

Years ago, an internal diagram of the device or a service manual was included with the purchased item, she said.

"Manufacturers stopped doing [that] because it's to their financial advantage to not do it," Byrne said.

Massachusetts was first on the "Right to Repair" law for cars

Massachusetts paved the way in consumer protection with a previous "Right to Repair" law in 2012, which focused on vehicle fixes. Before that law, car manufacturers were the only ones that had all the information needed to make repairs, creating a monopoly.

Once passed, the law allowed individual car owners and independent repair shops to have the same information, meaning they could make the same repairs. That law quickly spread to all over 50 states.

"Once Massachusetts passes this [digital right to repair law], it will probably have the same viral take-up by other states," said Byrne. "This is huge for consumer rights."

Sheriffs seek higher pot tax to finance addiction treatment

The total tax rate on marijuana sales could jump from 12 percent to 17 percent.

Two sheriffs urged lawmakers on Monday to use the legalization of marijuana as an opportunity to invest in substance abuse treatment by raising the tax on pot sales to support public and private addiction treatment programs.

"We are searching and starving for resources," Hampshire County Sheriff Nick Cocchi testified before the Joint Committee on Marijuana Policy.

The committee held the last of four public hearings as it works to produce legislation by June that would refine, if not completely overhaul, the legalization law passed by voters last November.

Hampden County Sheriff Patrick Cahillane joined Cocchi to testify in support of a bill filed by state Reps. Brian Ashe and John Velis that would increase the excise tax on retail marijuana by 5 percent, and earmark the money for a new Marijuana Addiction Treatment Fund that would be used to support public and private addiction treatment programs.

"It's not about kids smoking the occasional joint. Continual use can lead to addiction," Cahillane said.

Cahillane said he supported the concept of not overtaxing marijuana, which he agreed would fuel the continuation of a black market for the product, but also predicted an increase in arrests from the law due to impaired driving and other associated criminal activity.

Under the current law, marijuana sales would be subject to a 3.75 percent excise tax on top of the state's 6.25 percent sales tax and a local option tax of 2 percent.

The total tax rate on marijuana sales would jump from 12 percent to 17 percent, under the Ashe-Velis bill, which the sheriffs said would be in the middle of where other states have set their tax rates on pot.

The committee has already heard testimony on 50 bills concerning medical marijuana, local control over commercial marijuana facilities, and the regulatory structure for marijuana and public health.

Legislative leaders and the governor delayed implementation of the commercial marijuana market by six months, pushing the earliest opening date for retail marijuana shops to July 2018. MATT MURPHY, SHNS

FUNERAL

Notes found by ex-NFL star Hernandez's body turned over to family

Three handwritten notes found by the body of former New England Patriots star Aaron Hernandez following his suicide in a Massachusetts prison cell last week were released to his family on Monday, an official said.

Family and loved ones of Hernandez attended a private funeral that afternoon at his hometown in Bristol, Connecticut.

Some of the notes "could be considered suicide notes," Daniel Bennett, Massachusetts' secretary of public safety, told reporters.

The notes, found near a Bible, were handed over in full, the district attorney's spokesman said. Officials have not released the notes publicly or provided details on their contents.

Hernandez was found hanged by a bed sheet in prison last Wednesday in what Massachusetts officials have ruled a suicide.

Hernandez had been a rising star with a $41 million NFL contract when he was arrested in June 2013 and charged with murdering an acquaintance in an industrial park not far from the Patriots' stadium.

He was serving a sentence of life in prison without possibility of parole after being found guilty of that murder when he hanged himself, according to state officials. Hernandez's death occurred just days after his acquittal of a separate 2012 double murder.

"We wish to say goodbye to Aaron in a private ceremony and thank everyone in advance for affording us a measure of privacy during this difficult time," the family said in a statement ahead of the funeral.

The lawyer who successfully defended the 27-year-old former athlete in the double-murder trial has vowed to conduct his own investigation into the circumstances of Hernandez's death at the Souza-Baranowski Correctional Center in Lancaster, west of Boston. REUTERS

Amber Heard & Elon Musk are Instagram-official

A familiar face has casually popped up on Amber Heard's Instagram.

That's right: Heard, 32, posted a picture of her casually having dinner with the side of Elon Musk's face. And she made sure to mark him before the picture was snapped: Musk has a faint but clear kiss-shaped lipstick mark on his cheek. Heard captioned it "Cheeky," just in case things were too subtle, which they absolutely are not.

Musk, 45, shared a similar picture around a similar time, so yeah. I guess they are official.

Last week, Heard's father told Grazia magazine that the pair was very serious. "She would love to get married. One of the things they want to do is settle down and have a family. They are making plans for that." Why Heard's father is telling all of her business, I do not know.

While I'm no relationship expert, I'm thinking neither of them needs to be rushing into another short-lived marriage. Heard finalized her divorce from Johnny Depp earlier this year, while Musk divorced from his second wife for a second time late last year.

Also, considering Musk already has six children, I think they're good on the family front. This is starting to feel like a modern-day Von Trapp situation, and not in a good way.

Are Caitlyn and Kris feuding right now?

Caitlyn Jenner just found out that her ex-wife Kris is mad at her.

According to Us Weekly, Caitlyn didn't know about Kris's angry reaction to her new memoir until her "Good Morning America" appearance Monday morning. Kris told her daughters that after reading the book, she's done with Caitlyn. And Caitlyn didn't miss a beat.

During her appearance on the morning show, she told Michael Strahan that she doesn't even watch "Keeping Up With the Kardashians:" "Hey, it's a reality show. It is drama, but I'm just kind of sorry she went down that road." Sure doesn't sound like you're sorry, sis!

"I think the book is extraordinarily honest and it is my perspective. And obviously when you do a book there are different opinions," Caitlyn said. Well, memoirs are supposedly more about facts than opinions, but OK, sure!

A Cobb salad brought Jennifer Lopez & A-Rod together

Jennifer Lopez is opening up about the beginnings of her romance with Alex Rodriguez, and it is basic AF.

The 47-year-old chatted with Ellen Degeneres and called Rodriguez a "great guy" before divulging the details of their boring courtship.

The "Shades of Blue" star was just having a Cobb salad and some tortilla soup when she spotted the former Yankees shortstop. "For some reason, I just felt like tapping him on the shoulder." That small invasion of privacy led to the two scheduling a dinner date soon after, and the rest is history.

The pair have been dating for three months, and recently went Instagram-official. Rodriguez, 41, has described the time they are having as "good." He's a poet, basically.

So there you have it. According to both Lopez and Rodriguez, their relationship fluctuates between "good" and "nice." Sounds boring, but if you guys are happy, I'm happy for you!

Serena Williams pens an open letter to her unborn child, is chill

It's official! Serena Williams and Alexis Ohanian are expecting a dang baby. First, she posted (and then deleted) a Snapchat revealing she was at 20 weeks. Now, she's written a message that people are calling "heartfelt" and "emotional," and it's nice, I guess.

"My dearest baby," she wrote. "You gave me the strength I didn't know I had. You taught me the true meaning of serenity and peace. I can't wait to meet you. I can't wait for you to join the players box next year. But most importantly, I am so happy to share being number one in the world with you … once again today. On @alexisohanian bday. From the world's oldest number one to the world's youngest number one. — Your Mommy." Aw.

Her fiancé, Reddit co-founder Alexis Ohanian, shared a lil' something on Instagram too, but it was legitimately just those creepy Reddit cartoon versions of Williams, 35, and Ohanian, 34. I don't want to talk about it.

The pair announced their engagement last December. They will welcome their very talented, very rich, very beautiful baby that I'm already jealous of later this year.

What it's like to be set on fire

Sharlto Copley says "Free Fire" is the most dangerous film he's ever made.

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

When Sharlto Copley tells you his new movie was the most dangerous film he's made so far, you listen. The South African actor is no stranger to explosions and crazy stunts. He made his name with "District 9," then with "The A-Team," "Elysium," "Chappie" and "Hardcore Henry" — all violent action movies where Copley was game to do whatever wild nonsense came his way. But "Free Fire" — a darkly comic action movie from England with an all-star cast — takes the cake.

For one thing, Copley was set on fire. He plays Vernon, a moneyed arms dealer who arrives in an abandoned Brighton warehouse for a big score. One thing leads to another, and suddenly the dozen or so participants — including Brie Larson, Armie Hammer and Cillian Murphy — are all shooting at each other. Without giving too much away, at one point Vernon goes up in flames.

"Apparently getting set on fire is what insurance companies rate as the most dangerous thing I've ever attempted," Copley tells us, with a mix of pride and horror. It was one of the last things they filmed. "They were like, 'Finish the movie first, then he can burn himself.'"

Sharlto Copley (front and center-ish) plays one of a dozen or so low-lifes shooting at each other in "Free Fire," now in theaters. KERRY BROWN, A24

Luckily the stunt team were all over it. They fitted him with a flame retardant suit, as well as a gel that actually made him shiver until the heat hit him. They told him if he suddenly felt too hot, he should just lie flat on his stomach and they'd jump on him.

"It all went absolutely perfectly," Sharlto says. "But you are on fire."

But being set on fire wasn't what made "Free Fire" the most dangerous movie Sharlto Copley has ever made. It was the squibs.

On movies, squibs are the tiny firecrackers that, when activated by the crew, create the explosions you love on screen. On "Free Fire," they were mostly all over the set, blowing up parts of the dilapidated, dirty warehouse in which our legion of anti-heroes find themselves trapped in a multiway Mexican standoff. That required expert choreography, especially since some shots involved 16 or 17 or even 20 squibs blowing up at a time.

"If they press the button at the wrong time, it blows up in your face," Copley recalls. "At the distances we were at from these squibs, there was nothing to protect yourself and your eyes. It's your eyes that are really at monumental risk. There was so much gunfire that it made things bizarrely serious when the camera was rolling. But when it wasn't it was fun and games and silly buggers."

Lookin' good

One perk of making "Free Fire": the facial hair. It's set in the '70s, meaning most of the male actors had to grow beards and mustaches, as though they were competing with each other. (Copley thinks Armie Hammer won: After all, he had to use beard oil.) Copley has a nice, thick, bushy 'stache. And he was a little freaked out that his wife, the model and actress Tanit Phoenix, loved it.

"This is her favorite character I've done. I was like, 'Really, baby?,'" Sharlto reveals. "You used to look at that stuff as cheesy. Turns out a little bit of swagger, some chains around the neck and some sexist attitudes actually aren't as much of a woman-repellent as I would have thought."

'Deadpool 2' finally has a release date

So good time to point out that we don't like it one bit?

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Real talk: Ryan Reynolds was pretty annoying in 2016's "Deadpool." FOX

One of the most hotly anticipated movies on the planet, "Deadpool 2," finally has a release date. The sequel to the 2016 renegade comic book picture will now arrive on June 1, 2018. Perhaps you're stoked, because it's your favorite movie ever — a refreshingly profane antidote to all the square superhero fare that still makes all the money. So don't mind us if we rain on everyone's parade by pointing out that "Deadpool" blows.

Smarmy, smug and epically self-pleased, "Deadpool" grates on our nerves. Though he's made great strides over the years at broadening his craft — he's great in "The Voices" and "Mississippi Grind" — Ryan Reynolds wound up reverting to his "Van Wilder"/"Two Guys and a Girl" smirky phase, as though he was convinced he's the most entertaining human on the planet. The movie is so in-your-face about being a comic book movie that's not your typical comic book movie that the only sane response is to call bulls—.

Or so we thought. As it turned out, audiences ate it up, and now it's as big a franchise as any random Marvel outing. And so here comes "Deadpool 2," which at least will have Josh Brolin as the baddie named Cable — an excellent choice, though we are sad that Michael Shannon, previously in the running, didn't get the gig. And those of us naysayers will once again have to endure all this talk about how "Deadpool" is the most original superhero movie ever made. Sorry, but no.

New moms on the struggles of breastfeeding

Hannah Horvath loses her mind trying to get her baby to latch. Marnie isn't much help as her smothering sidekick. HBO

In the "Girls" series finale, Hannah's baby has trouble latching. We hear from real women about their own nursing ordeals.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metro.us

Hannah Horvath isn't the first mom to struggle with breastfeeding.

In the "Girls" series finale, "Latching," we see Lena Dunham's character lose her mind because her newborn baby, Grover, won't latch onto her nipple and take her milk. She feels like a bad mother whose baby hates her, and acts butt hurt (boob hurt?) as though he were just another guy rejecting her. And giving Grover a bottle of formula is viewed as a last-case scenario — giving up.

Kudos to "Girls" for depicting this incredibly trying aspect of motherhood. We're often told that breast milk is best for the baby's health, and that the act fosters a fundamental mother-baby bond that will serve the child for years to come, but no one prepares women for the basic logistical difficulties of the act, not to mention its physical and emotional toll.

We hear from real women on their struggles with breastfeeding and what they wish they had known before to prepare.

When you give birth to twins but can't make enough milk for both mouths

"I physically couldn't breastfeed. I produced some milk but not nearly enough for two babies. It was so disappointing because before you have a child, breastfeeding vs. formula is presented as this sort of choice of equal options, but the reality is that one is 500,000 times more difficult than the other and there's not even a guarantee you can do it.

"We had to supplement with formula from day one because they were too small and I wasn't making enough milk. I stopped breastfeeding at all around four months."

When the baby latches but that's not the end of your troubles

"My baby latched from Day One, but I would have to try a million times until he got the breast right. He has to have his mouth open and you have to bring him right over to your breast. I called the lactation nurse many times. Without her help I don't think I would have made it. Funny thing, from watching movies, I thought nursing was so easy. Do you remember 'The Blue Lagoon'? The baby just goes to Brooke Shield's nipple and starts sucking. Well, it is not like that at all."

When pumping at work is a logistical nightmare

"When I went back to work, that's when the trouble started. For me, I was teaching at a university, so I would have back-to-back classes and I would have a break every three hours. I'd run to this room, which was like a converted dorm room designated for this, it was so disgusting in there. I would pump and then run back to my next class to teach, hoping there was nothing leaking. It's the most infuriating process."

When you can't breastfeed because you have inverted nipples and your baby is tongue-tied

"I read all the stuff on breastfeeding, but [my baby] wouldn't latch. After a few days in the hospital, the pediatrician said, 'Oh, he has a tongue-tie.' Sometimes babies are born with the skin under their tongue more forward so their mouth can't really open. Plus, I have inverted nipples. I pumped exclusively for five months. Eight times a day. I was like a Medela cow milking myself.

"The whole point of breastfeeding is that you're supposed to have this amazing connection with your child. [Instead] I pumped, and my husband would feed him the bottle. I felt like my husband was his f—ing mother! And because you're kind of crazy, you're thinking, 'Oh, my child doesn't like me, and I'm doing all the work pumping eight times a day, my nipples are chafed, I can't leave my house for long because I'm attached to this machine, so, it was just this depressing cycle. It wasn't the experience I wanted."

OUTLOOK FOR CELTICS BETTER, BUT STILL FAR FROM GREAT

OPINION

@burke_metro

Isaiah Thomas scored 33 points in both Game 1 and Game 4 in the Celtics - Bulls first round series. GETTY IMAGES

The Cavaliers just accomplished what a true top seed does in the first round of the NBA playoffs by dismantling the Pacers in four games.

Even dating back to the Garnett-Pierce era, the Celtics have had a tricky time in Round 1. The year they won the title, the Atlanta Hawks (featuring rookie Al Horford) took them to seven games. The next year, in 2009, the Chicago Bulls also took the Celtics to seven games.

It's now an entirely different era (though it's kind of odd that two different first-round draft picks of the Celtics from the mid-2000s — Gerald Green and Rajon Rondo — are the leaders on their respective teams in this series). But this series too looks like it's going seven games.

The Celtics were bailed out in Games 3 and 4 with Rondo on the bench with a broken right thumb. Chicago registered just 14 assists in Game 3, which is hard to do. Rondo had 14 assists by himself in the Bulls' Game 2 win at the Garden. In Sunday's Game 4, the Bulls did a little better job of moving the ball as they had 19 assists as a team. Jimmy Butler led Chicago in Game 4 dimes with nine, and still scored 33 points, but you gotta figure the Celtics will keep him in check a little better on Wednesday.

A Rondo comeback in this series is the only way the Bulls can hand the Celtics a first-round playoff exit for the third straight year, and fortunately for Chicago — there are whispers that that may be possible. The Vertical's Chris Mannix, who is tied into the league and the Celtics' old guard pretty well, tweeted this on Monday: "Prediction: Rajon Rondo plays in Game 5."

This series has been tough to figure out for sure, with the road team winning every game so far, but expect some normalcy the rest of the way. In other words, I think the Celtics live to see Round 2.

THE BULLS HAD JUST 14 TEAM ASSISTS IN THEIR GAME 3 LOSS TO THE C'S.

The next issue, of course, is that all four of the teams the C's could see in the semifinals (Bucks, Raptors, Wizards, Hawks) are playing much better than Boston right now. That could change based on how the Celtics look this week — but as of right now I would pick any of those teams over the C's in seven games.

Games 2 and 3 in this Bulls series were washes — as both were blowouts. The signature games in this series so far are Game 1 and Game 4. Isaiah Thomas scored 33 points in both of those games and got to the line at least 12 times in each contest.

What's going to happen, though, when the Celtics run into a team with better defensive guards? The Milwaukee-Toronto series is a defensive slugfest, with the Bucks holding the Raptors to 88.3 points per game and the Raptors holding the Bucks to 94.3 points per game.

The Celtics need to find someone other than Isaiah who can pump in 20-plus points on a given night, because there are going to be games ahead in which the opposing team solves Isaiah.

Having won these last two games, the Celtics have some time to figure it out. But not too much time.

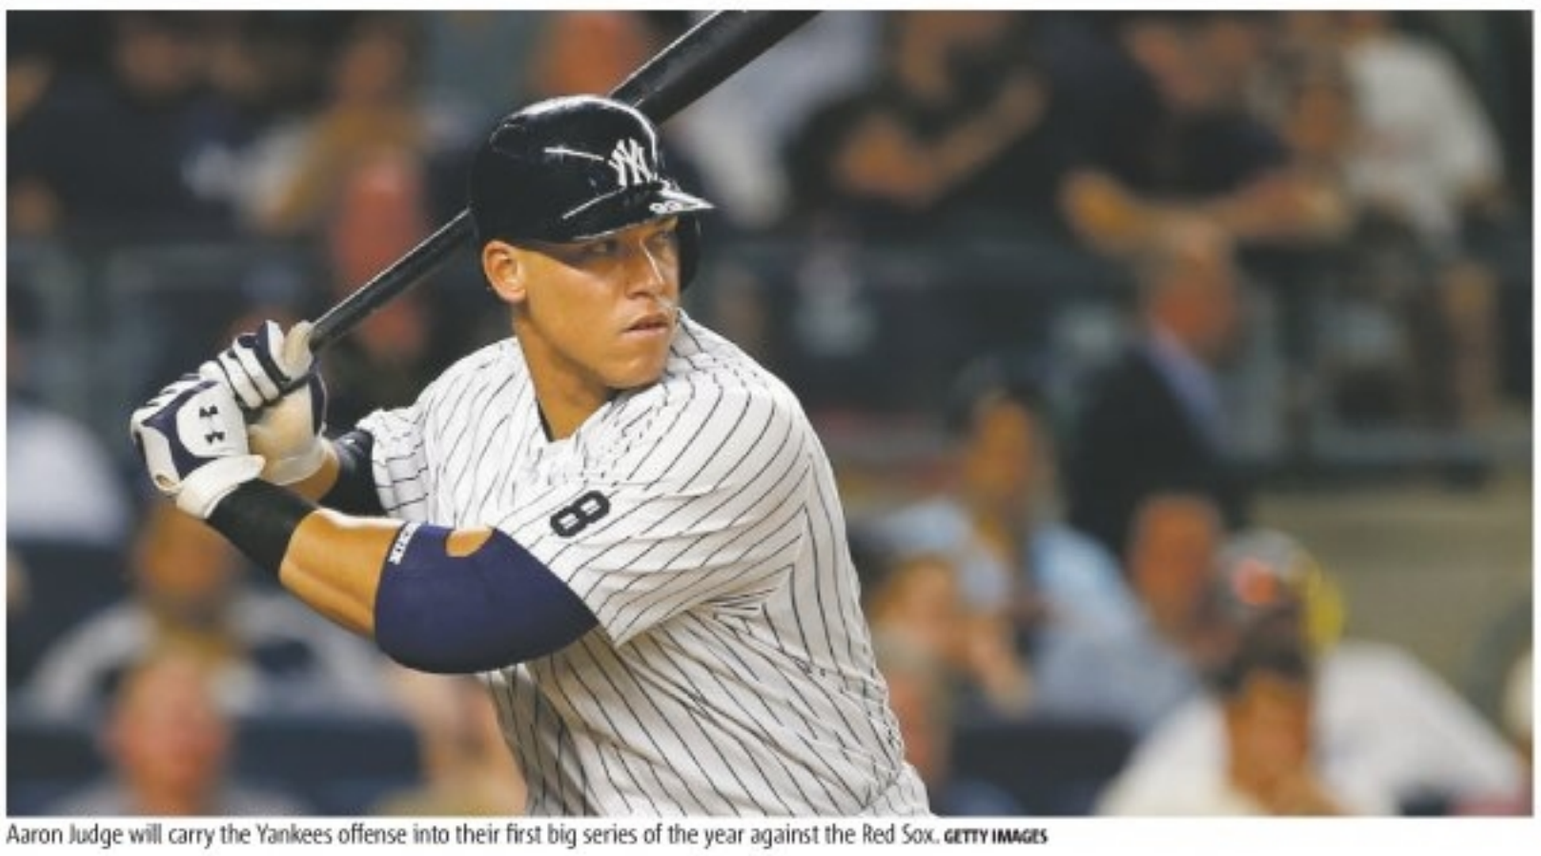
Red Sox and Yankees resume baseball's best rivalry Tuesday



Aaron Judge will carry the Yankees offense into their first big series of the year against the Red Sox. GETTY IMAGES

Tuesday will be the 2,143rd all-time meeting between the two clubs.

JOE PANTORNO
@JoePantorno
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

Yankees, Red Sox.

Just putting those two names together will perk up any baseball fan and create a pit of resentment within the stomachs of many New Yorkers and Bostonians.

For 114 years, these two franchises have created countless memories that will live on in the annals of Major League Baseball history in a rivalry that will continue on as long as there is baseball.

And to quote Albert Hague's famous Christmastime jingle of one Mr. Grinch, the two teams and their fan bases go together as well as "a three-decker sauerkraut and toadstool sandwich with arsenic sauce."

The good news for everyone is that the Yankees and Red Sox will resume their ancient rivalry on Tuesday night from Fenway Park in Boston for early-season supremacy in the American League East.

As of Monday, the Yankees hold a slim ½-game advantage over Boston, though both are looking up at the Baltimore Orioles.

The Pittsburgh Pirates, winning two of three games in the Steel City, cooled off New York over the weekend. Prior to their series, the Yankees had won nine of 10 games after a 1-4 start to the season.

The Sox are also coming off a testy series in which they dropped two of three to the Baltimore Orioles. After scoring just two runs in the first two games of the series, Boston salvaged Sunday by collecting 14 hits in a 6-2 win.

The victory was overshadowed by Matt Barnes throwing at the head of Baltimore star Manny Machado. Don't expect any warm, fuzzy feelings to enter this Yankees-Red Sox series, either.

Boston, considered the divisional favorites after acquiring Chris Sale during the offseason, will look to squash any notion that the Baby Bombers can hang with the Sox.

It creates an aura not felt around the rivalry this early in a season for quite some time. However, it will be a trial by fire for some of the Yankees' more inexperienced stars like Aaron Judge, who holds the power to vaporize a baseball with just one swing.

The 24-year-old, who turns 25 on Wednesday, pulverized his sixth home run of the season on Saturday that traveled 457 feet.

He and the New York lineup are going to be facing the top of Boston's rotation with dates against reigning AL Cy Young Award winner Rick Porcello, Sale and Drew Pomeranz, by far the best trio of hurlers they've faced this season.

Aries Don't take on too much or get involved in something that has the potential to upset your relationships. Moderation will be necessary to avoid conflicts.

Taurus Apply what you know to something that you find interesting, enjoyable and motivating. It will make your chores easier if you have something to look forward to.

Gemini Get together with people who have something to offer. Share your thoughts. Don't overstep your bounds. Stay focused and make the most of what you've got.

Cancer Your emotions will take control if you let a partner, domestic issue or child get the upper hand. Don't feel obliged or let anyone guilt you into making a snap decision.

Leo Take a close look at your professional position and potential advancement. Network at industry events and think about the newest trends.

Virgo Attending a seminar or meeting that can provide you with information that is pertinent to something you want to pursue will help you avoid making a mistake.

Libra Partnerships will go through an adjustment. Be ready with suggestions to avoid being railroaded into something you don't like. Ask a friend to help resolve a dispute.

Scorpio An intense push to get things done will pay off, but will also challenge you physically. Take time to rejuvenate to avoid health issues that interfere with your progress.

Sagittarius Personal problems should be dealt with quickly. The more you ignore an uncomfortable situation, the worse it will become. Do what needs to be done.

Capricorn Too much of anything will work against you. Keep your distance from people who are unpredictable, inconsistent or emotionally unstable.

Aquarius A financial proposal should be considered carefully. Taking baby steps to reach your goal will work out better than stretching your budget.

Pisces You'll be faced with decisions that can challenge you physically or wreak havoc on your reputation. When in doubt, slow down and weigh the pros and cons. EUGENIA LAST
